Work Completed:

- Monday:
 - Implemented XML storage method so that all XML files are stored in the default user program storage location (Windows: AppData), so that when reading and writing to xml files, the input and output locations are always consistent with the jars location
 - Implemented XML JDOM methods to edit and delete xml data, which added onto the existing add new data and read from xml functionality. Can now edit any value of the xml data and can delete entire sections or specific sections
 - Worked on fixing bugs throughout main program
 - Reviewed multiple pull requests from Josh Bradley and Luke Warbey. To review their code and make sure there were no errors before merging the branches into the main branch.
 - Worked on updating the HTML tour so that a tree directory was implemented to view each folder of files for the timesheets and minutes.
 - Myself and Josh Bradley planned what to do tomorrow (Tuesday) so that everything for DocDuck can be finished off efficiently and with everything as complete as possible. Assigned tasks to other group members with Josh so that everyone is aware of what needs doing.
- Tuesday:
 - Worked on fixing up any remaining bugs with Luke and Josh.
 - Implemented methods to get the working directory for when uploading and fetching images and other data types
 - Worked on the HTML Tour to add the software planning documents and interactive GUI mockups
 - Tidied up any github branches that hadn't been merged into the default branch, so that all the code was ready to export and zip up.
- Wednesday:
 - Collected together all reports and code ready for submission
